The most extensive auction land sale in the history of Asheville began to-day. Nearly two hundred lots are to be sold, twenty-four of which to-day brought $45,075.50. Several of the purchasers were non-residents. The property is all wooded and part of it within the city on an extension of a fashionable street. TO BORE FOR GAS.

A company was formed some little time are for boring for natural gas. Its capital is $25,000. The boring is to be done with drills worked by steam. As the machinery has been ordered, the experiment will probably be made, though scientists do not encourage it, but the stockholders say that the is no new thing, and success has more it is no new thing, and success has more than once been achieved against their advice. The public is curious to see the result.

A large excursion has arrived to-night from Raleigh, Durham, and other points.

NEW ARRANGEMENTS AND PLANS. The directors of the North Carolina Steel and Iron Company were in session last night and again to-night. The meetings have been secret, but your correspondent is informed that there has been a complete reorganization of the company; that new arrangements have been made and new plans formed. I also learn that contracts for furnaces will be let and the work of erecting them begun at once. Negotiations which have been pending for some time for the remainder of the stock have been closed and the stock taken. New life seems to be enthused into the company, and the announcement of the reorganization and the early commencement of work will revive the boom of this place.

WILL THE TRACKS COME UP?

The fight between this city and the Richmond and Danville Railroad Company will be decided at the occupancy of Henry street by the tracks of that company will be decided at the next term of Judge Keith's Circuit Court here. Corporation-Attorney Brent has prepared the necessary papers for the purpose of dissolving the injunction taken out by the railroad against the city some years ago. That the city has a clear right to have the tracks taken up was decided in the case of the Alexandria and Washington railroad against the city, when the city compelled the road to take up its track on St. Asaph street. The tracks on Henry street were put down by the United States during the late war and when it closed the railroad was allowed to take the tracks on condition that they would pave between them and two feet on each side of them. This condition has never been complied with, and as numerous complaints have been received from the residents of that section about the railroad the city has determined that the tracks must come up.

HIS CRUEL TREATMENT.

The substance of the testimony was as follows: He cursed and abused her for the omission of comparatively trifling and unimportant domestic duties, such as not filling a lamp with oil. When under such treatment she refused to cook longer for him, he then threatened to deprive her of food, saying that she could not eat at his table, and when finishing his meal locked up the pantry. These proceedings went on for three days when he made a feeble attempt to apologize, removing then to Newport News to live in rented rooms. No comforts were provided for her and they had to live in very small rooms, one of them being about 10x14 feet, in which they cooked and entertained her visitors. He contributed but scantily towards the clothing of the children, and during seven and a half years of their married life had provided her with only one dress and one hat, the rest of her support having been gained by her own exertions. While keeping boarding-house at Newport News he intimated that she was too intimate with a certain boarder, whom she immediately notified to seek other quarters.
